Bromley & Son, who have purchased all of the equipment, stables and good will, and will continue the office at the old stand. Since the death of Mr. Marshall the business has been carried on by A. A. Beckwith, administrator of the estate, who has retained with him Mr. George F. Nolan as chief cierk, and he will continue in the same capacity with the new firm. The new owners are well equipped to continue the business and no doubt will not only hold the present large patronage but matethe Marshall Trucking Business. the present large patronage but mate-rially increase it. BREED THEATER.

One of the brightest and prettiest motion pictures that has even been produced is now on exhibition at the Breed theater for the feature of the first part of the week, it being entitled Back Among the Old Folks, carrying a wealth of beautiful settings and a powerfully dramatic story. A country lad goes to the city and prospers, but forgets his old home and sweetheart until at the home of his city sweetheart he becomes engaged in a fight for the hand of the girl and is later accused of killing his rival. He is convicted and sent to the penttentiary, but the real villain is discovered and the lad, after having spent a varied and unhappy life in the city, is released from custody and is brought home by the old folks to the land of his birth and the love of his faithful country sweetheart. The picture closes his birth and the love of his faithful country sweetheart. The picture closes with a supremely tranquil touch of nature as the old mother places the light in the boy's room for him to rettre and later steals into the room to kiss him good night and remove the light, the picture closing with the removal of the light, leaving the screen in darkness.

A screaming Biograph comedy is on, and keeps the house in an uproar from beginning to end, while the splendid song of Miss Wolcott's entitled The Land of Tomorrow comes in for splendid recognition, as does the very up-to-date song entitled Uncle Sam is Ahead of Them All.

Connecticut Rebuked.

Connecticut Rebuked.

It will be remembered that when the general assembly of the state of Connecticut enacted last winter the preposterons sterilization law its author stated in private, if not in public, that it was an entering wedge; that its usefulness along broader lines would have to be determined by experience. At present Connecticut's interference with the laws of nature in the matter of procreation is limited to felons and inmates of insane asylums. In this connection the following from the New York Evening Post constitutes a deserved rebuke to the Connecticut notion of self protection: "Flippant theorizers in sociology who talk foolishly about the need of educating the world up to the point of killing off the physically defective and helpless would do well to read the last annual report, just published, of the New York Association for the Blind. Before we decide that any class of unfortunates is helpless, we should be wise to find out what has been done to make them help themselves." Then follows a statement of the remarkable achievements which the blind have made.

But it will be immediately said: "It

But it will be immediately said: "It is not proposed to operate on the blind." Who knows that? If we are to trust a lot of surgeons with the responsibility of selecting one batch of defectives for treatment, why not another? The mischlef becomes an unknown and an untold one so long as man undertakes to exercise the judgment of Providence.—New Haven Journal-Courier.

suits through the general heeding of this timely exhortation. It is not too early for local authorities everywhere to be preparing for the reform to which they are invited. Not prohibitive regulations alone are needed, but the substitution of programmes for rational enjoyment to succeed the old time abuses. These should be made inclusive of the whole population by providing sensibly for all. The action of Gov. Weeks is one of many signs that the purpose to rescue Independence day is becoming general.—Springfield Republican.
